

Telemarketers are out of control. I have been in direct contact with many that misrepresent terms or products they are selling. An elderly friend of mine is tormented by them trying to presser her into purchases. My boss was contacted by one that represented himself to be from his bank offering an additional service. As the general public tries to be more consumer conscious, merchants have been reduced to pushing services/products on the public any way they can, including dishonestly. The public has enough pressure dealing with everyday life situations, let alone now distinguishing legitmate sales calls. No means No.....the first time!
